Presents a 5 day course on

Leading under Pressure Developing Leaders to Manage Organizational Challenges

When viewed in context, organisational resources and their management are of more significance than is immediately apparent. The management of resources, especially the human resources – people, can only be analysed and discussed – or performed – in the context in which it takes place. One needs to understand the context and the functions, skills and techniques required to manage people and challenges properly.

In this course on Leading Under Pressure you will be oriented towards areas of Leadership and Management in which various techniques can be used to create a strategic organisational intent in your specific context, department or unit. You will be introduced to the “new” environment of people management. By placing you into this context, you will be able, through experiential learning techniques, to understand and prioritise the various components of managing people and organisational challenges in a service delivery context. You will have a thorough overview of the process of leadership and management and an insight into some of the newer techniques, processes and skills involved in mastering the successful management of work based challenges, crises and problems in your own work environment.

It is important, if not vital, that managers, at all levels and across all functions must manage themselves and their subordinates, peers and superiors in order to achieve performance goals, both of the individual and the organization. This course focuses on awareness and competency-building in the assessment of individual development needs, conflict management, negotiation skills, building and maintaining teams, managing diversity, and motivation in the work place – all geared towards the manager getting the best performance from the people they are trusted to lead by managing people, priorities and quality more productively.

“Management is doing things right; leadership is doing the right things.
